

In today's complex economy, workers are looking to partner with firms that ensure a comfortable future.

A large part of this planning involves retirement preparation and making certain that at a set age, you will retire with a known sum of money. Many factors make this a difficult task, including financial risk, constant regulatory changes and market unpredictability. You know that to attract the best talent today you need to offer more than an adequate salary. Workers are looking for strong benefits, a promising retirement plan and a variety of other incentives that will determine where they will want to work. Because you want to have a superior workforce, you need to make sure that you can offer the most competitive and beneficial plans for your employees.

You have fiduciary responsibilities to fulfill, all of which are outlined in the Employee Retirement Security Act of 1974, the Department of Labor and the Internal Revenue Service. Compliance with these regulations while managing the retirement plan in the best interest of your employees can be overwhelming. You need a flexible and effective plan for your employees but also an efficient one for your firm to administer. Engage your employees in planning for retirement, meet your fiduciary responsibilities and comply with all laws and regulations by obtaining a customized, open-architecture plan from Sikich. It will allow you to optimize results for you, the employer, and your employees.
